I have had the privilege of being poor. And frankly, it fucking sucks.

But poverty teaches a kind of hunger few wealthy men retain.

Today, I saw that hunger in a man of immense wealth—the grit, the drive, the restless ambition of a younger man with nothing to his name.

The kind of man who would take us to space.
The kind Yuri Gagarin would be proud of.

Today, I thank him for his tenacity—and his extraordinary courage.
